

About Objects Expands iPhone Training Curriculum

New iPhone programming courses to be Offered in U.S. and Europe.

Reston, VA (PRWEB) February 4, 2009 -- About Objects is set to enhance its popular lineup of training courses for Cocoa and iPhone developers, while increasing the number of locations at which they will be publicly offered.

The company has developed two new courses to round out its current offerings, which include Objective-C Programming, Cocoa Programming, and iPhone SDK Programming. The new 5-day iPhone Programming Workshop provides a thorough, hands-on introduction to iPhone development in Objective-C for developers with a C programming background.

According to About Objects President, Jonathan Lehr, "We've taken a lot of the great feedback and suggestions from our attendees and done our best to incorporate them in the enhancements we made to the existing curriculum. I think people are really going to love these new classes -- we managed to find ways to make things simpler while adding a ton of new stuff, so developers are going to learn more than ever."

In addition to offering iPhone and Cocoa training at its Reston, Va. headquarters, About Objects plans to begin offering public classes in Cupertino, Ca., and Short Hills, N.J. in the first half of 2009.

To make iPhone training even more widely available, the company has licensed a new 3-day course entitled iPhone Jump Start to UK-based affiliate, Intrinsic Development Corp (<http://www.id.com>). Intrinsic CEO, Chris Walters said, "We're pleased to bring a new iPhone developer training course to the UK, offering developers in UK and Europe endless opportunities in this exciting, dynamic market."

Intrinsic Development will also offer the iPhone Jump Start course in several U.S. cities, including New York and Austin.
